

Choosing the Correct Level of Harm

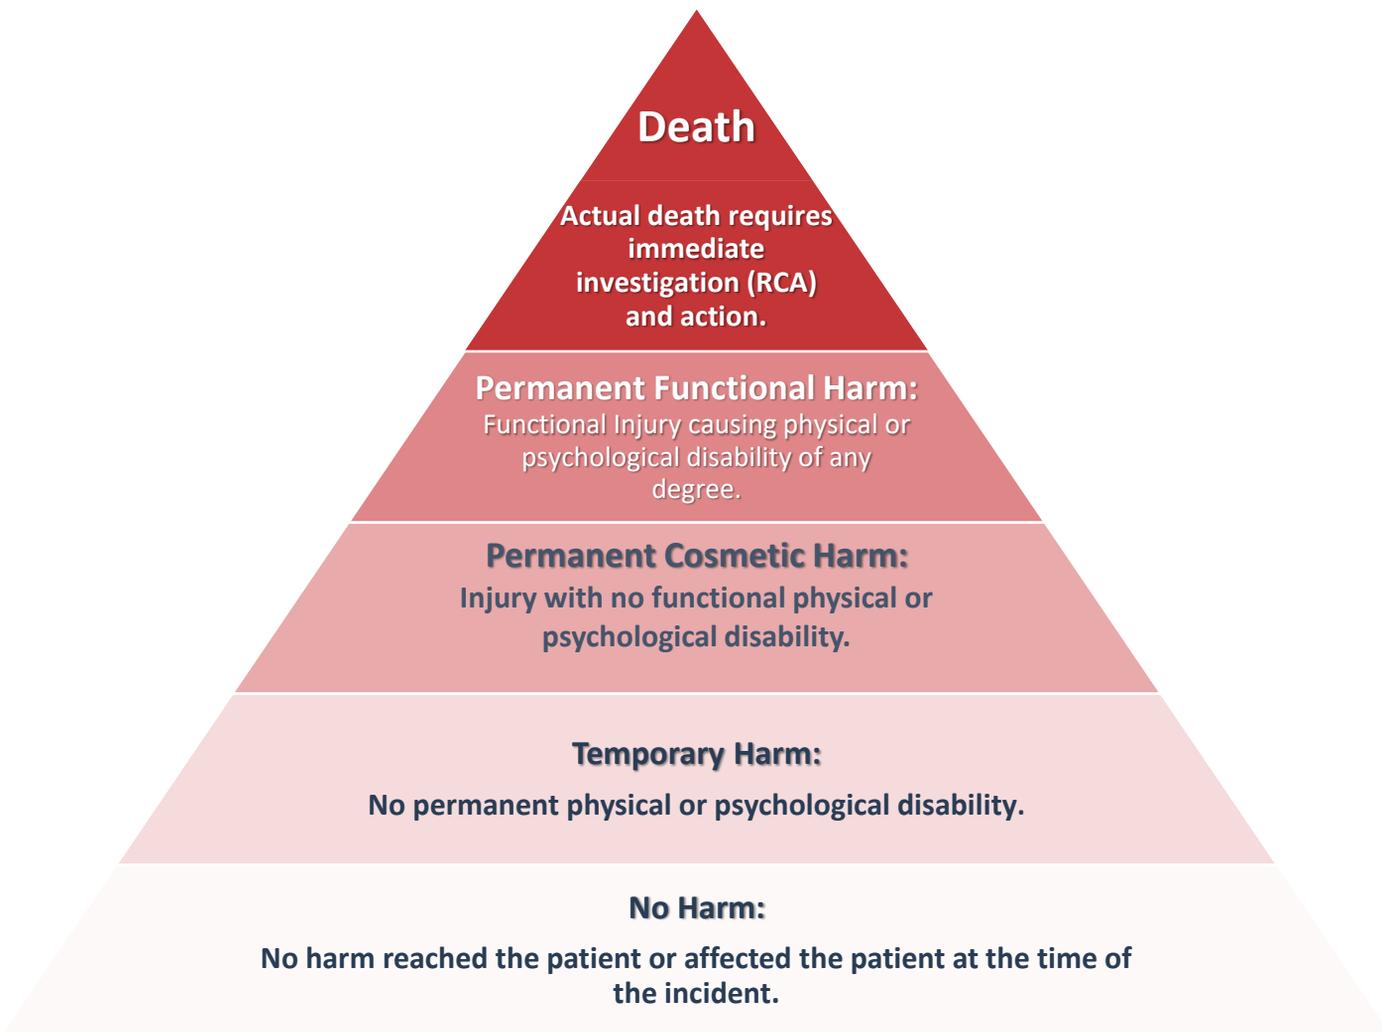

Several incidents have been reported with a level of harm that does not reflect the actual effect that reached the Patient/Staff/Organization. Choosing the incorrect level of harm can affect the quality of the reported incident, required action, and eventually the outcome.

Harm:

Any physical or psychological injury or damage to a person's health, including both temporary and permanent injuries.

How to choose the correct Level of Harm?

*All incident definitions are for an actual result of deviation from the generally accepted standards of care and are not potential.
